Tourism Around the Globe

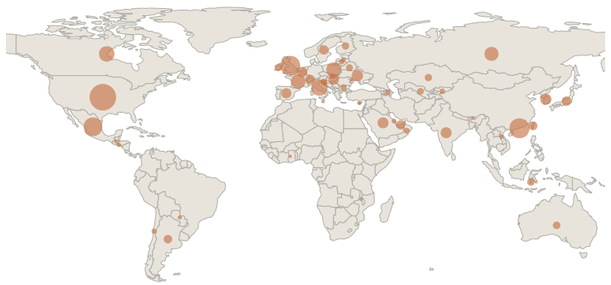

Jet-setters or Homebodies?

The size of the dots on these graphs show how many trips people took to each of these countries (left) and how many trips people left to go on (right). They show that Europe is a hotspot for vacations and North America is full of travel-lovers.

Tourism supports millions of jobs and contributes significantly to GDP in some countries. India stands out as having a high number of tourism-related jobs despite relatively low expenditures, likely reflecting lower prices and cost of living in India.

Macao (below) similarly stands out as an outlier with a high percentage of GDP coming from tourism, which may be attributed to its small population and lack of other industries.

Impact of COVID on Tourism by Region Indexed to 2012

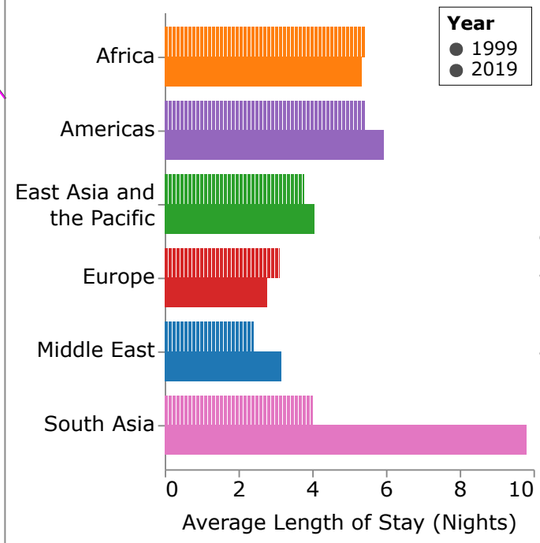

The Forces Behind the Fun

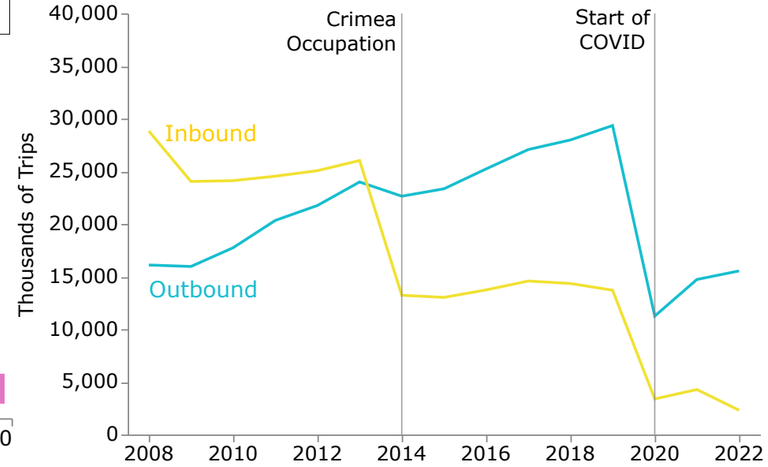

Global events and innovations shape where we choose to travel and how long we choose to stay. The COVID pandemic caused a sharp decline in tourism worldwide (left). Pre-COVID, average stays were increasing in most regions (below-left), particularly in South Asia, potentially reflecting the rise of remote work and digital nomads.

Tourism in Ukraine (below-right) illustrates the impact of war on travel patterns, as less people enter the country and more leave. COVID further exacerbated this decline.
